human behaviour in action'

Ian Harper began his safety career as a safety advisor in the civil engineering sector in East Anglia, covering a wide and diverse portfolio of projects ranging from power station construction to railway signaling upgrading projects. He took a National Management position with a leading construction company in 2004 and managed health and safety in the utilities sector covering power, water and gas including pipeline projects and receiving facilities.

In 2007 he set up his own consultancy identifying and implementing behavioral systems in high achieving organisations and carrying out risk engineering with large insurance companies.
